(Hampton, Virginia) – Crewestone Technologies, Inc. of Hampton, Virginia has been awarded NASA's prestigious Minority Subcontractor of the Year Award. Crewestone was nominated by Tessada & Associates, Inc. of Springfield, Virginia for its outstanding performance on NASA Langley Research Center's Consolidated Logistics, Administrative and Scientific Information Contract (CLASIC). Crewestone was selected over other nominees from across the agency. The award was presented September 9 at NASA's 13th Annual Minority Business and Advocates Awards ceremony in Washington, D.C.

Nominees were evaluated for their performance, innovation, customer service, safety, management, cost savings, employee development, compliance with equal opportunity regulations, mentoring of other minority business, community involvement and community outreach.

"My life's desire has always been to own my own business and to be recognized for my outstanding work. This recognition by NASA exceeds my expectations. Their acknowledgement is one which comes from this country's leading authority in excellence." My approach may be considered old fashioned, but, my company's business philosophy is based on hard work and giving the best product value to the customer," said Larry Crewe, CEO/President, Crewestone Technologies.

Under the CLASIC contract, Crewestone provides key Video services for Langley's Research Community, the Office of Public Affairs and the Office of Education Distance Learning Program. Additionally, Crewestone manages the contract Audio/Visual (A/V) Services Branch. "As part of Team Tessada, Crewestone has been an innovator and superb subcontractor. They have been a key contributor to our excellent safety record and lead the way with a flawless safety record of no accidents or incidents in the two plus years since contract inception, " said CLASIC Program Manager, Pete Marty of Tessada & Associates, Inc.
